

What is FCE?

The National Association for Family and Community Education is a volunteer organization established in 1936 as the National Home Demonstration Council. The organization has evolved with the times and changed its name throughout the century, but the basic mission has remained the same: To educate individuals and community members for the improvement of family and our society.

Whether learning how to better educate our children, preserve food, or how to clean up our environment, we will always look for ways to preserve good in our society.

National FCE's present focus areas are:

*Health Issues
Home & Community Environment
Leadership Skills
International Programs
Youth Education
Media Education*

THE LOCAL CONNECTION

A local FCE brings together a small group of people with common interests. Support and information from state and national FCE conferences and trained leaders helps each local FCE group set and meet goals for the strengthening of the families and communities where they live.

Membership information

Membership is open to individuals through an FCE affiliated local/county/state group by meeting their qualifications for membership and paying dues through their FCE affiliated state association. Members are represented by vote at National meetings and receive many benefits from the state association. Local contact is listed on the back of this brochure.

Individuals may join as supporting members by paying dues directly to National FCE Headquarters when they choose not to belong through a state affiliate. They are not represented by vote at National meetings.

Corporate membership is $100.00 and is paid directly to National FCE.
